THE FIRE INSIDE

BASED ON THE BEST SELLING BOOK
“CHANGE, IF I CAN, YOU CAN”

Imagine the typical high school in the United States with about 750 students. Close to 150 of these students experience bullying at school. Over one-third of the girls and about one-fifth of the boys suffer from some degree of depression. One hundred seventy students will have been offered or sold drugs and 345 (nearly half) will have had sex. By the end of their senior year, roughly 217 of these students will have dropped out. One of those troubled teens was Travis Angry.

“I awoke from a deep sleep to the sound of my father stumbling through the house, knocking things over, and then to my parents’ shouting. The door of my bedroom was cracked open. The light from the living room poured onto the floor, showcasing my parents’ shadows darting aggressively, like some kind of horrific puppet show. My father stood in the middle of the living room, breathing heavily. I had witnessed my father intoxicated on previous occasions, but I immediately recognized that on this night, he had reached a new and terrible level of desperation and despair. Everything inside of me told me to run, hide under my bed, and cover my ears until morning... but it was then that I saw my mother crouched in front of him, trembling like a wounded hyena encircled by a pack of ravenous lions. “Give me some money, Gleneel!” my father roared, stumbling toward her. “Please, Raymond, I ain’t got no money!” my mother begged, her deep, brown eyes wide with fear. He lunged past her, yanked open the kitchen drawer, and pulled out a long, sharp, butcher knife. The blade ominously glinted in the dim kitchen light before my father whipped his body back toward my mother and pressed the blade to her jugular.”
